2020 OLYMPICS TO LOWER SWIMMER QUOTA BY 22 ATHLETES

The International Olympic Committee made several sweeping announcements about the 2020 Tokyo Games this morning, among them some adjustments to athlete quotas in a number of sports designed to bring greater gender balance to the next Olympics.

Swimming will see its athletes quota drop by 22 athletes, according to the IOC press release. For the Rio Olympics, the athlete quota for pool swimming was 900, and the new Tokyo quota will be 878 – that's 439 men and 439 women.

That figure is not to be confused with each nation's maximum roster size, which has typically stood at 26 men and 26 women for pool swimming. There has been no indication that those numbers will change for Tokyo. The athlete quota is for overall athletes from all nations allowed entry into the Olympic Games, rather than the maximum number of athletes allowed for each individual country.

Based on the qualifying criteria for the 2016 Rio Olympics, the Olympic hopefuls affected will be those with FINA B cuts but not A cuts. Here's a quick breakdown of Olympic selection procedures from Rio:

1. Swimmers with a FINA A cut (up to 2 per event per country)
2. Athletes in relays from qualifying countries
3. Universality entrants: countries with no A or selected B cuts can enter one man and one woman. Countries with one man or one woman qualified can enter one swimmer in the other gender.
4. Swimmers with a FINA B cut (up to one per country)

In other aquatic sports, water polo will see two more women's teams added to competition. In Rio, 12 men's teams and 8 women's teams competed, but in Tokyo, there will be 12 men's programs and 10 women's. To counterbalance that with the overall athlete quota, the IOC has reduced roster sizes for each team, ultimately leading to a net reduction of 18 athletes in the sport's Olympic quota.

Obviously, the biggest news from today's IOC announcements is the addition of two distance events (the women's 1500 and men's 800 frees) and a mixed relay (the mixed 4×100 medley relay) to the Olympic swimming lineup. We covered that announcement in depth here.

The IOC calls these changes “a significant step towards achieving the 50 per cent gender balance at the Olympic Games in both athletes and events.”

Here's a full look at the events being added or changed for the 2020 Olympics in all sports, and below that a look at the changes in athlete quotas for various sports. This is all courtesy of the IOC's press release from this morning:

DISTANCE EVENTS AND MIXED MEDLEY RELAY ADDED TO TOKYO OLYMPICS

In a set of changes that might both excite and frustrate swim fans, the IOC announced today that the men's 800 freestyle, the women's 1500 freestyle, and the mixed 400 medley relay will all be added to the swimming program for the 2020 Summer Olympics in Tokyo. The addition of the women's 1500 and the men's 800 free will mean that men and women will finally compete with the same exact event lineup, something for which fans have clamored for years. Previously the 800 free was the longest women's event. Men have competed in the mile or 1500m free in the Olympics since 1904, while the women's 800m free has been part of the Olympic program since 1968.
